Martin County Installs WeatherSTEM System to Provide Real-Time Information About Storm Activity

Martin County Emergency Management is excited to announce the acquisition and implementation of a new weather monitoring system, WeatherSTEM. This innovative monitoring system allows for more accurate forecasting of current and potential weather conditions through Smart Weather Technology. WeatherSTEM provides users live-streaming high resolution weather cameras, weather health/safety alert notifications, lightning detection, heat level monitoring, and real-time/future-cast radar information.

Martin County has strategically placed WeatherSTEM weather stations across the community, which will help first response partners understand, in real-time, weather related hazards which may be a threat, including high heat conditions and lightning. This system will allow the Martin County community to have more access to current and historical publicly available weather information and data. The implementation of WeatherSTEM is done in partnership with the Florida Division of Emergency Management, who will cover all associated costs for the initial three years. Future costs will be covered through Emergency Management grants.

“The WeatherSTEM system will provide timely, potentially life-saving information to the Martin County community,” says Michele Jones, Martin County Emergency Management Director.

WeatherSTEM is in place and active at locations throughout Martin County. Residents can access the local WeatherSTEM forecasts and weather monitoring by visiting <http://martin.weatherstem.com/> or by downloading the WeatherSTEM app through the Apple App Store or on Google Play.
